The Internet of Things

Should you worry if your jeans go smart?

What if those new jeans you've just bought start tweeting about your location as you cross London Bridge? It sounds bizarre, but it's possible – if they are equipped with a tiny RFID device, your location could be revealed without you knowing about it. This technology is just one of the current ways of allowing physical objects to go online – the so-called Internet of Things.

Those in favour of the IoT claim that interconnectivity would allow us to locate and monitor everything, everywhere and at any time. Imagine a smart building where you know how many people are inside just by detecting movement with motion-sensitive lights. This could help save lives in an emergency.

But as more objects become part of the digital world, there is growing debate over the benefits of smart technology versus the lack of privacy. To what extent can surveillance of people be accepted? Which principles should govern the use of the IoT? The European Commission, for example, has established a framework to safeguard consumer privacy as industries develop this technology further.

Within the retail industry, a number of stores have started using RFID tags to check and track stock more easily. However, some people are worried that the RFID reader being used by a shop employee to check the number of pairs of jeans could also read the data on a customer's driving licence, for example, if it contained a RFID chip. This could then lead to identity theft. If the tag is not removed at the checkout, the item could be tracked on the street. Once the tag is thrown away, it can still be scanned, allowing someone to get an idea of your shopping habits.

Supporters of the IoT point out that in our already digital and high-tech society your mobile phone operator and bank know much more about your life than your partner does and it is certainly more critical information than the type of jeans you wear.

★ The Internet of Things, shortened to IoT, is the integration of the physical world with the virtual world of Internet. Objects such as your car, house, clothes, fridge or family pet are electronically tagged with important information and then can be connected to the Internet through remote, contact-less technology.
