TOP 10 SOFT SKILLS OF IT WORLD?

John finished school and now he wants to find a job...

... so he started searching for adverts. He searched in newspapers, online websites, *Linkedin.

(If you want you can go to the Job Centre.)

After finding some vacancies, to apply for the job, he knew that he had to write and Application Letter and his CV(curriculum vitae) / résumé.

What do I need to write in my résumé????

- my personal details and contacts,
- my experience ordered chronologically,
- my qualifications
- other information like artistic skills, hobbies, voluntary work...
- driving license.

...and in the
application letter?
What should I write?

- where I saw the job vacancie and when,
 - brief intro about myself,
 - a small paragraph about my skills and personal qualities,
 - if I am available to work shifts, part-time, overtime,
 - suggest that I am available for an interview.

Why do companies use the interview process?

Not all jobs require an interview. Some examples might be digging ditches or graves, trimming trees or other yard maintenance, etc. In other words, if a special skill is not needed, but just involves manual work, an interview may not be required. If a special skill is required, companies want to learn more about the skills you possess. What is your skill level in reading, writing, and doing math? Do you get along with others? Do you have good communication skills?

All done!
How do I contact the companies?

- I can use e-mail,
 - I can send through mail,
 - I can go to the company myself and leave my CV and application letter in hand...
- ... and wait for an answer.

→ When you do an online application you are acknowledged automatically .

→ When you send by e-mail, mail or in hand, companies usually assess your CV first and only then they contact, giving feedback , whether your CV fits the candidate profile they are looking.

Resume vs. Curriculum Vitae (CV)

- Showcases competence: work history, accomplishments, etc.
- Used for practically any job
- Typically concise (one page)

- Showcases credentials: certifications, research, affiliations, etc.
- Used for academic, scientific, and medical jobs
- Typically detailed (several pages long)

Application Letter

Your address, but not your name, on the right. The name and address of the person you are writing to on the left. The date: usually under the address

Formal greeting and closing. If you do not know the person's name, use Dear Sir or Madam and finish with Yours faithfully.

Use formal language and full sentences. Do not use contractions or abbreviations.

Paragraph 1:

Give your reason for writing. Say why you are interested in the job.

Paragraph 2:

Say what you can bring to the job.

Paragraph 3:

Say when you will be available for interview.

4th July 2012

Dear Mrs Adams

I am writing to apply for the post of temporary receptionist, which I saw advertised in the local newspaper on 1st July. I enclose a copy of my CV. I have just finished the first year of my A level studies and am interested in gaining work experience within the hotel business during the summer, as I hope to apply to university to study Hotel Management.

As you will see from my CV, I have some experience in dealing with people. Although I lack direct experience as a receptionist, as a shop assistant I have dealt with all types of customers in a polite and helpful way. In addition, I can offer skills in IT, German and First Aid.

I would very much like to be a part of your team. I am available for interview next week, and I look forward to hearing from you.

Yours sincerely

N Woodward

👁👁 Avoid contractions

Mind your language!

- | | |
|----------------------|------------------------|
| 1. e.g. d) | a) that is (to say) |
| 2. i.e. a) | b) approximately |
| 3. esp. e) | c) as soon as possible |
| 4. approx. b) | d) for instance |

| 6. asap c) | f) number |

👁👁 Use formal language and business wording

Mind your language!

It is important to keep in mind that formal language is more appropriate in a professional environment. Always avoid the use of slang.

Changing just one single word can make a sentence more formal, for example:

“Able to create a variety of written content, such as articles, news releases...”

is more formal than

“Able to create a variety of written content, like articles, news releases...”
